Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: . . . SURGERY OF THE ABDOMEN, EXCLUSIVE OF HERNIA. By ABRAHAM O. WILENSKY, M. D. The art of surgery, especially when applied to intra-abdominal disease, has reached a high stage of development. The actual procedures with which individual operations are done, are fairly well standardized; and, as far as one can look ahead, it seems that the essential principles, upon which our methods of operating are based, will, probably, not be very materially modified in the years to come. The trend of research and investigation, as exhibited in the last years, is, apparently, taking other directions and is two fold: It comprises the effort to decrease, as far as is humanly possible, the dangers necessarily attendant to the operative procedures which, perhaps, the insufficiency of our knowledge still seem to make necessary, and to uncover the etiological causes of the various forms of disease; possibly the...
