Sarasvati Research Center, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 371 x 249 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Sagan owns an ancestral brass foundry in Jagadhri, India, where copper and zinc are alloyed to create trade mark Jagadhri brass vessels. The author born in Kidarankondan Tamil-speaking province and educated in Telugu in Penukonda meets Sagan after returning from Manila, Philippines. Together they travel around the globe and visit Louvre and other museums in search of Sarasvati, the Himalayan river and attempt to read the message of Shu-ilishu cylinder seal in cuneiform writing. The novel reports that Sagan has found Sarasvati and her divine message, using ancient links between Ancient Near East and South-Southeast Asia. Sagan Munda and Karmi Hatu, manage the brass foundry close to the place where Sarasvati surfaces into the plains, flowing from Manasarovar glacier. They are like a pair of monogamous extraordinary Anser Indicus, hamsa birds, which can fly at heights above 24000 feet during their annual migrations with their goslings, and across the Himalayan ranges from Europe into India. The couple are caught up in a court-room drama contending with academics from an Ivy League University. Sagan acts like a detective in his search for Sarasvati River which is venerated in ancient songs and dances of India. Father Brown is the role model for Sagan as a detective. Sagan was charged with the crime of forgery of an Indus seal image from Daimabad, the proceedings in the court recollect a Harvard Donkey case to provide a spirited summing up to prove Sagan s innocence and literacy of his ancestors. Defense proved allegedly forged image to be that of a rim of a narrow-necked jar. The narrative moves beyond the evidence phase, browsing across Indus script corpora and Karmi Hatu presents...
