Not illustrated. 1869 Excerpt: . . . night when, at midnight, and all was in repose in Egypt, the destroying angel suddenly appeared, and all the nation, struck with the same blow, awoke in the midst of the night with a great cry: for there was not a house where there was not one dead. What grief and what consternation! While Pharaoh wept for his firstborn son, the heir of his throne, the poor man mourned in his hut, and the prisoner in his dungeon; all were smitten, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the firstborn of the captive that was in his dungeon. But whilst all Egypt mourned, what were the Israelites doing They were assembled by families in their quiet dwellings, and were eating in peace the supper of the passover. And what was their safeguard against the stroke of the destroying angel It was a...
