Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .a competition, by making impossible a rise in the price of Superior ores as the mines are exhausted, would make only more imperative the application of capital to keep down cost, and so would but give more point to the theory presented in the first chapter. The whole question of the possible effects of the changes of process now taking place in steel manufacture is too large for consideration in a monograph of this character, and is therefore omitted. 9. To summarize briefly, the five great iron ranges lie almost parallel to the lake shore and distant from their shipping ports from 12 to 90 miles, the prevailing grades on the railroads being favorable to the loaded trains. The nearest of these shipping ports is about 550 miles by lake from Cleveland, the center of distribution to the furnaces, and the most distant of them about 300 miles farther away. The ores, deposited by underground water action in great pitching troughs, occur in masses of varying size and irregular shape. The Mesabi deposits differ from all others in that they lie in flat, shallow troughs near the surface. They are, moreover, more friable than any of the old range ores, the Gogebic most nearly approaching them in this respect. Ores of every degree of hardness, varying widely as to phosphorus, silica and moisture contents, and suitable for the most various processes of iron and steel-making, are tobe found on the different ranges. The mines are most...
