Congressional Sales Office, 2001. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)48181275 Subject: Discrimination in employment -- Law and legislation -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 practices is reprisal for whistleblowing. Several other laws also protect employees from reprisal by prohibiting agencies taking or threatening to take - or not to take - a personnel action because of an employees whistleblowing activities. Unfortunately, despite these protections, some federal employees have experi-enced or believe that they have been subject to workplace discrimination or reprisal for whistleblowing. Such experiences or perceptions - and the complaints and law-suits they spur - not only disrupt the lives of the affected employees, they can also undermine the efficient and effective delivery of government services to the public and discourage a diverse, pluralistic, and accountable workforce. With these thoughts in mind, I have three points to make that relate to the prin-ciples underlying the proposed act. Reporting. Because data are not readily available, there is no clear picture of the number of complaints of workplace discrimination and reprisal for whis-tleblowing at agencies or governmentwide and the outcome of these cases. Data of this nature are important because they can be a starting point for agency managers to understand the nature and scope of issues in the work-place involving discrimination, reprisal, and other conflicts and problems, and can help in developing strategies for dealing with those issues. Accountability. Accountability is a cornerstone of results-oriented manage-ment. Agencies and their leaders and managers should be accountable for providing fair and equitable workplaces, free from discrimination and re-prisal. In addition, individuals need to be held accountable...
