The article on this subject was revised in the time of Elizabeth, but not so as really to encourage any notion of a transubstantiation. f Collier, ii. 309, 310. Book vn. livers from the communion; that the old clerical;AP habits should be laid aside, since by many they were used superstitiously, and pious men were not disposed to use them; that the people should be required to commune more frequently than once a year; that the priest should place the sacramental bread in the hands of the people, not in their mouth; that all prayer for the dead should cease; that the rubric which prayed that the elements might become the body and blood of Christ to the recipient should be discarded, as savouring too much of the doctrine of transubstantiation; that the hallowing of water, and the chrism, in baptism, should be laid aside; that the language of adjuration in the exorcising should be converted into prayer; that candidates for confirmation should be examined more thoughtfully and scripturally; that extreme unction, and the chrism in the churching of women, should be abolished; and that much more care should be shown in the ordination of men by the bishop, the great want of the times being a larger number of duly qualified preachers and pastors. Many of these suggestions were adopted. In the book as revised a second time, the opening sentences, the exhortation, the confession, and the words...
