Henry Acland, Regius Professor of Medicine, played a key role in the building of Oxford s new science museum in the 1850s. In this essay, he describes expectations for the building - its construction was nearing completion as he wrote. He also discusses its famous connection to the Gothic style. While guiding readers through some of the building s chief features, Acland leaves no doubt this was a project meant to combine nature and God; reverence and rigour. It s a vision of science that s largely forgotten today. Acland appends two 1858/9 letters from John Ruskin. The great advocate of Gothic design elaborates core principles of this approach and relates them to Oxford s museum. A superb summary of Gothic Revivalism. Acland also adds 1859 correspondence from John Phillips, describing plans to integrate geological materials into the building s decorative features.
